Re: Justice Department Review of the BMI and ASCAP Consent Decrees

To the Chief of the Litigation III Section:

BMI recently alerted its community of affiliated songwriters, composers and publishers to the profound impact 100% licensing would have on their careers, both creatively and financially, if it were to be mandated by the U.S. Department of Justice.

In a call to action, BMI provided a letter, one for songwriters and one for publishers, to which their signatures could be added. The response was overwhelming. BMI received nearly 13,000 signatures from writers, composers and publishers of all genres of music, at all levels in their careers. Some of the industry's most well-known songwriters added their names, including Stephen Stills, Cynthia Weil, Steve Cropper, Ester Dean, Dean Pitchford, Congressman John Hall, Trini Lopez, John Cafferty, Gunnar Nelson, Lori McKenna, Shannon Rubicam and Don Brewer, among many others.

Enclosed you will find the letters, with signatures attached. On behalf of BMI, I strongly urge you to consider the voices of thousands of songwriters and copyright owners reflected here before making a decision that will adversely affect both the creators, and the ongoing creation of, one of America's most important cultural and economic resources.

Very truly yours,

Stuart Rosen

Re: Justice Department Review of the BMI and ASCAP Consent Decrees

To the Chief of the Litigation III Section:

Each of us is a songwriter and an affiliate of BMI. We truly value our association with BMI.

We write today in response to the Justice Department's request for public comments on the issue of whether BMI and ASCAP's consent decrees should require the PROs to license on a 100% basis, as opposed to fractionally licensing jointly-owned songs, which has been the historical industry practice. It's important that our voices are heard, because a shift to 100% licensing would severely impact our creative freedom, our ability to choose which PRO licenses our music and, ultimately, our livelihood as songwriters.

Songwriters are the ultimate small business owners. Many of us have families that depend on the income we receive from BMI. Each of us has carefully chosen BMI as our PRO for multiple reasons: the trusted relationships we've developed there; the opportunities BMI provides for our music to be heard; the various creative networking opportunities BMI provides; and, at the end of the day, we like the way BMI values our music and fights for writers to get fees that reflect the fair value of our creative work.

Like most modern songwriters, we often choose to collaborate with other writers. Just recently, every song in the Top 10 on Billboard's Pop, Country, Christian, and R&B/Hip-Hip charts was the result of collaboration. If the practice of 100% licensing is mandated by the Justice Department, our co-written works could be licensed – and we could be paid – by a PRO that represents our co-writers' interest in our songs. The licensing fee the other PRO charges might be lower than the one BMI has negotiated or fought for in rate court, and despite our chosen affiliation, we would have to accept the lower fee. Because BMI values music differently than other PROs, we also wouldn't be able to keep the benefits of BMI's specific valuation system.

As a result, having our work licensed by a different organization than the one each of us has chosen could dramatically affect our income. It could delay and potentially lower our royalty payments, which would now have to flow through two PROs. Somehow we would each have to monitor what we are being paid by a PRO we have no relationship with, figure out whether they have missed any of our performances, understand how and when they will pay us, determine whether we are getting our fair shares of bonuses under the other PRO's distribution system, and so on. For these reasons, it might no longer be financially viable for any of us to collaborate with a writer outside of BMI.

It also might not be creatively viable either. The creativity and success of any songwriter stems from being able to work with songwriters of our choosing, regardless of their PRO affiliation. If the 100% licensing model were imposed on the PROs, in order to keep our work entirely within BMI, our PRO of choice, we would have to collaborate only with fellow BMI writers. All of a sudden, our individual and careful choice of collaborator would not be driven by artistic chemistry or compatibility, but by rules imposed by the government. The 100% licensing model sounds like the government stepping into the creative process and effectively dictating our collaborators and our licensing representatives.

As we understand it, music users from radio to digital music services to local television have all traditionally paid the PROs according to their respective shares of the music. Similarly, BMI has only ever paid us for our shares of co-written songs. What the Justice Department is contemplating is in stark contrast with how the PROs have been conducting business for decades and would wreak havoc in the songwriting world as we know it.

Each of us urges you to carefully consider your decision and take into account the impact it will have not only on all songwriters across our nation, but also on our creative contributions to American culture. Without the freedom to collaborate and choose representation, the profession of songwriting is in jeopardy, as is the music that touches all of our lives.

Re: Justice Department Review of the BMI and ASCAP Consent Decrees

To the Chief of the Litigation III Section:

Each of us is a music publisher and an affiliate of BMI. We truly value our association with BMI.

We write today in response to the Justice Department's request for public comments on the issue of whether BMI and ASCAP's consent decrees should require the PROs to license on a 100% basis, as opposed to fractionally licensing jointly-owned songs, which has been the historical industry practice. It's important that our voices are heard, because a shift to 100% licensing would severely impact the creative freedom of our songwriters, our ability to choose which PRO licenses our music and, ultimately, the livelihoods of our songwriters.

Like songwriters, most publishers are small business owners. Each of us has carefully chosen BMI as our PRO for multiple reasons: the trusted relationships we've developed there; the opportunities BMI provides for our music to be heard; the various creative networking opportunities BMI provides; and, at the end of the day, we like the way BMI values our music and fights for writers to get fees that reflect the fair value of our creative work.

Most modern songwriters often choose to collaborate with other writers. Just recently, every song in the Top 10 on Billboard's Pop, Country, Christian, and R&B/Hip-Hip charts was the result of collaboration. If the practice of 100% licensing is mandated by the Justice Department, any of our works co-written with any of the other PRO's songwriters could be licensed – and we could be paid – by a PRO that represents the co-writers' interest in our songs. The licensing fee the other PRO charges might be lower than the one BMI has negotiated or fought for in rate court, and despite our chosen affiliation, we would have to accept the lower fee. Because BMI values music differently than other PROs, we also wouldn't be able to keep the benefits of BMI's specific valuation system.

As a result, having the work of our writers licensed by a different organization than the one each of us has chosen could dramatically affect our income. It could delay and potentially lower our royalty payments, which would now have to flow through two PROs. Somehow we would each have to monitor what we are being paid by a PRO we have no relationship with, figure out whether they have missed any of our performances, understand how and when they will pay us, determine whether we are getting our fair shares of bonuses under the other PRO's distribution system, and so on. For these reasons, it might no longer be financially viable for any of our writers to collaborate with a writer outside of BMI.

It also might not be creatively viable either. The creativity and success of any songwriter stems from being able to work with songwriters of their choosing, regardless of PRO affiliation. If the 100% licensing model were imposed on the PROs, in order to keep a work entirely within BMI, our PRO of choice, they would have to collaborate only with fellow BMI writers. All of a sudden, the individual and careful choice of collaborator would not be driven by artistic chemistry or compatibility, but by rules imposed by the government. The 100% licensing model sounds like the government stepping into the creative process and effectively dictating our collaborators and our licensing representatives.

As we understand it, music users from radio to digital music services to local television have all traditionally paid the PROs according to their respective shares of the music. Similarly, BMI has only ever paid us for our shares of co-written songs. What the Justice Department is contemplating is in stark contrast with how the PROs have been conducting business for decades and would wreak havoc in the songwriting world as we know it.

Each of us urges you to carefully consider your decision and take into account the impact it will have not only on all songwriters and publishers across our nation, but also on our creative contributions to American culture. Without the freedom to collaborate and choose representation, the profession of songwriting is in jeopardy, as is the music that touches all of our lives.

Very truly yours,
